Minister's school zone petition 'very disappointing'

Police push back. Denis appeals to principals, parents for enforcement support

City police say they're "very disappointed" to learn the provincial justice minister has been circulating a petition in recent weeks that would "urge Calgary" police to ramp up traffic enforcement in school and playground zones.

Metro has obtained copies of the petition being circulated by provincial Justice Minister and Solicitor General Jonathan Denis and has pieced together from various accounts that he attempted to have school principals circulate the documents within their communities. He also provided a copy to a parent advocacy group that has boosted child safety efforts in the past.

Denis, wasn't available for an interview to explain the petition. however, a spokesperson said.

But police spokesman Kevin Brookwell said the service didn't take too fondly to the minister's endeavour.

"To jump to an MLA level and then jump to a legislative level when there are so many mechanisms and so many great relationships that we already have in place with the schools and the community — and so many ways of communicating with us — it's just disappointing to see that it would have to go to this point," Brookwell said.

The petition being pushed by Denis breaks a long-standing claim from him in interviews on various topics in which he's said he would never direct police enforcement tactics.

His petition reads, "We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge Calgary to increase traffic enforcement in school and playground zones."

The minister indicated in an obtained letter concerning his petition that he would take all copies of the signed petition to the provincial legislature.

A press secretary did provide Metro an emailed statement from the minister that said, "My job as an MLA (is) to represent the interests of my constituents first. A number of people have raised the issue of traffic safety in school and playground zones with me and I helped them make their views heard."

Fatality

One dead after fiery Deerfoot Trail crash

One person was killed early Sunday after an SUV lost control on Deerfoot Trail, struck a light pole and burst into flames, according to police.

The single-vehicle crash happened around 5:30 a.m. on southbound Deerfoot near Anderson Road, said acting Det. Jack Russell.

"The vehicle was fully engulfed in flames," he said.

Southbound Deerfoot remained closed until shortly after noon, as a traffic reconstruction team and medical examiner investigated the crash.

Police couldn't immediately tell the age or gender of the deceased, who was the only person in the vehicle. Police don't know if speed or alcohol were factors in the crash.

Any witnesses are asked to call the police traffic section at 403-567-4000.

Man arrested after threat against WestJet flight

RCMP in Kelowna have arrested a man in connection with threats made against a WestJet flight that had just arrived from Edmonton and was heading to Calgary.

Kelowna airport spokeswoman Jenelle Hynes says a man phoned the airport with a threat directed toward the flight to Calgary.

She would not provide details about the threat and says police took the man into custody at the airport.

Pump up the volume: Visually impaired rider

Busing. Calgary Transit stop announcements aren't loud enough, says Brandon Hicks

HELEN PIKE
helen.pike@metronews.ca

A visually impaired Calgary Transit passenger wants CT to turn up the volume dial — on its audio-visual announcement notification systems, that is.

The audio-visual announcements on buses have been a pilot project since August. So far most buses are equipped with screens and speakers to announce stops, with the exception of around 40 vehicles.

Brandon Hicks is visually impaired and depends on transit every day. Since the pilot project started, he's been able to rely on his own senses instead of having someone else help him when he's taking a bus.

In the past, when he rode a new route, Hicks depended on talking with the driver or riding with friends to get off at the right stop.

Now he's running into a new problem: The notification system isn't loud enough.

"I travel a lot with a couple of friends. We actually have a sports team of visually impaired people," said Hicks.

"Some of us can see a little bit, so the people who can see noticed that the buses have the big screens that also display the announcements as well as speak them.... The announcements don't have any audio."

Stephen Tauro, communications strategist for Calgary Transit, says drivers don't have control over the announcement volume. The system is centralized, so volume control isn't an easy flip of the switch for drivers.

"In the case of a volume issue, we are asking customers to give us a call and let us know," said Tauro.

He added that it's possible that volumes differ between buses. "It's important to try to get the route number, or sometimes if the bus number is possible, that would be good, too."

Wildrose, Alberta Party call for investigation of Dirks

Admitted vote buying?
In letters to ethics commissioner, Clark and Smith cite comments education minister's campaign manager made to Metro

ROBSON FLETCHER
robson.fletcher@metronews.ca

Education Minister Gordon Dirks' approval of modular classrooms for a school in the constituency where he's currently seeking election would be illegal in other jurisdictions, according to the leaders of two provincial parties who are calling on Alberta's ethics commissioner to investigate.

"This is completely unethical," Wildrose leader Danielle Smith said Sunday. "In Saskatchewan and Manitoba, governments aren't allowed to make announcements during an election campaign or a byelection because there's a perception that they're doing it to turn votes."

Smith and Alberta Party leader Greg Clark — who's running against Dirks for the seat in Calgary-Elbow in Monday's byelection — each separately wrote to ethics commissioner Marguerite Trussler on Saturday, requesting an investigation.

At issue is a letter Dirks posted online last Wednesday, stating, "two modular classrooms have been approved for William Reid School and should be in place for the 2015-16 school year."

The announcement came despite a Calgary Board of Education ranking system for a variety of schools desperate for more classroom space in which William Reid's score — based on enrolment projections, site features and cost — placed it seventh out of 10 on a list of schools waiting for modulars.

Clark said William Reid parents are eager for more classroom space but "don't want special treatment" just because the education minister is running in their riding.

"Only the PC party wants to wield this as some sort of political favour," Clark said. "What people want is good process."

In their letters, both Clark and Smith cited comments made by Dirks' campaign manager Alan Hallman to Metro on Friday.

Hallman told Metro the decision to approve the modulars was related to opposition parties "cranking up a whole bunch of parents during a byelection to politically activate them."

"It looked very clearly in that article that the campaign manager was agreeing that the reason the decision was made was to win votes or to defuse opposition, and he didn't seem to think there was a problem with doing that at all," Smith said Sunday.

Metro spoke with Hallman again on Sunday to arrange a phone interview with Dirks, but neither called back nor returned subsequent text messages by press time.

3 sets of signs, 3 undecided voters

When candidates stress the importance of door knocking in election campaigns, it's households like Gisele Ruel's that they have in mind.

The family of five has no television and, between work and school and hockey practices, has only had time to casually follow the byelection campaign in Calgary-Elbow.

"We might read the paper once a week," Gisele said. "So what we've heard is what they've said at the door, basically."

Gisele said they've welcomed every campaigner who's rung their doorbell, and never turned down a request to put up a lawn sign.

On Sunday, their front yard was adorned with multiple signs for three different candidates: Liberal Susan Wright, the Alberta Party's Greg Clark and the PC's Gordon Dirks.

But, the day before the vote, Gisele said the family remains firmly undecided.

"We're not sure how we're going (to vote)," she said.

Her husband "really liked" Clark when he came to visit, she said, while she was particularly impressed by Wright's position on seniors' health care.

Then a representative for Gord Dirks, Alberta's currently unelected education minister, dropped by, and gave them even more to think about.

Gisele said education is a top priority for the family, with children aged 18, 16 and 11, adding that all the voting-age family members plan to further research party platforms Sunday night, before polls open on Monday.

"We have three voters in the house, so maybe all three of us will vote differently," she said.

Premier running. Four byelections in Alta. today

Premier Jim Prentice is looking to gain a seat in Alberta's legislature Monday in one of four byelections, but he rejects any suggestion that the votes are a referendum on his government.

"These are four individual byelections," Prentice told a Calgary radio station on Friday.

"I trust the judgment of the citizens in those ridings to make the choice."

Prentice, who is running in Calgary-Foothills, called the byelections four weeks ago. The others are in Calgary-West, Calgary-Elbow and Edmonton-Whitemud.

All four have been strongly contested by opposition parties.

The Opposition Wildrose took to running attack ads on TV and radio. They reminded voters of failed Tory promises to fix health care and build schools, while spending lavishly on travel and office perks under former premier Alison Redford.

City to test winter 'sprinklers' on roads

Ice issues. Bridge decks among the diciest for winter driving

JEREMY NOLAIS
jeremy.nolais@metronews.ca

City officials are eyeing tests of some slick technology in a bid to keep bridge traffic running smoothly come wintertime.

This year, the application of a de-icing agent will be left to a fleet of city trucks, but Calgary roads director Troy McLeod said by next winter, his team hopes to pilot the use of automatic "sprinklers" on both the Glenmore Causeway and the Crowchild Trail bridge running over the Bow River.

"With those bridges, there aren't a lot of alternatives (for motorists)," McLeod said. "So, we want to keep those locations clear of any incidents as much as possible."

McLeod said he hadn't chosen a specific sprinkler model but noted that all are activated by temperature. Once the mercury dips to a certain point, the roads are sprayed and — in theory — ice never has a chance to build up.

Alberta Transportation rolled out similar technology in 2011 at a cost of $2.3 million. It was used on the eastbound lanes of Edmonton's Anthony Henday Drive at a bridge running over the North Saskatchewan River.

Christine Wronko, a provincial spokeswoman, said similar devices have been used on a major bridge leading from Highway 63 near Fort McMurray.

"We're starting to see that it's reducing the ice buildup," she said. "It does improve the driving conditions ... getting to it beforehand as opposed to trying to de-ice."

Wronko said the province had yet to make a decision on whether to expand the program to westbound lanes on the Henday as well as other major highways.

McLeod, meanwhile, said using the technology in Calgary could have benefits for not only the roads equipped with sprinklers, but other routes that tend to get slippery as well.

"It just augments the service we already have and it would be targeted at key locations," he said.

"It does provide that instant application and would allow our resources to focus on other critical areas as well."

Elsewhere

The de-icing pilot on Anthony Henday Drive, launched in 2011, was the first time such automated technology was used in Alberta, though similar equipment has been installed in Ontario and Quebec.

Homophobic robocalls target Wildrose party voters: Smith

Formal complaint.
Party appealing to CRTC for an investigation

ROBSON FLETCHER
robson.fletcher@metronews.ca

Robocalls apparently originating from the United States and targeting Wildrose supporters with homophobic messages ahead of Monday's byelections have prompted the party to file a formal complaint with Canada's broadcast regulator.

Wildrose leader Danielle Smith said her party first reported the calls to the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission (CRTC) more than a month ago, but then lodged the official complaint over the weekend after "numerous people" reported receiving them again after a period of relative quiet.

"I'm not sure how they're targeting it or who's behind it but it appears they're generating from a couple of American phone numbers," she said Sunday. "So we're asking the CRTC to investigate."

Smith said the calls condemn her and other Wildrose MLAs for attending the Calgary Pride parade this year and include a line about "naked men dancing in front of children" and ask listeners: "Is this consistent with your values?"

Smith described the calls as a "voter suppression tactic."

Alberta Party leader Greg Clark — who several weeks earlier called for an investigation into automated calls he said were harassing Calgary-Elbow voters and fraudulently claiming to originate from his campaign — condemned the tactics, generally.

"Anytime I hear about anything like this, it's disturbing because it takes away from democracy," Clark said Sunday. "It's the sort of thing that people hate about politics. It turns people off."

Quoted

"If you can have individuals who can do this during our provincial election, then they can do it during any election in any province, or at the federal level."

Southern Alberta

Jury to start deliberations in murder trial

The jury will begin deliberations in the trial of a man accused of murdering and dismembering a senior from southern Alberta.

The torso of Otto (Bunty) Loose, who was 77, was discovered by police in the snowy woods west of Bragg Creek, Alta., in January 2012.

The Vulcan man's hands were missing and his head was found several kilometres away.

Timmy Engel, who is 37, is charged with first-degree murder.

Crown prosecutor David Labrenz said in closing arguments Friday that Engel cashed a $10,000 cheque from Loose, just one day after Loose was killed and before his body was found. He also said Engel had used Loose's bank card to take more money out of his account, saying money was the motivation for the crime.

Earlier in the trial, two undercover police officers testified that Engel confessed to the murder and asked them to help him dispose of the head.

But Engel later recanted and said another man did it and he was just pulled along.

"He is reliving a memory," Labrenz told jurors. "He isn't reliving a memory of what he saw, but of what he did."

Defence lawyer Karen Mollie said police manipulated Engel into confessing by arresting his pregnant girlfriend.

Mollie also said while Engel was able to tell police exactly where they could find Loose's head, he didn't know where the murder weapon was or what he did with it after.

She said that Engel had said the other man used a hacksaw to remove Loose's head and hands, and while a hacksaw blade was found in Loose's vehicle, it was never tested to see if it matched his wounds.

‘Our engineers are simply the best’: Calgary lessons in employing people with autism

Be bold. Meticulon offers marketing lesson to Belgian company that inspired it

ROBSON FLETCHER
robson.fletcher@metronews.ca

When it comes to connecting people on the autism spectrum with detail-oriented jobs where they can excel, Belgium-based Passwerk has developed the “playbook” that Calgary-based Meticulon is now following.

But there’s one thing Passwerk executives Nico De Cleen and Dirk Rombaut learned on a recent visit to Alberta: How to be bolder.

After spending several days visiting with the staff of Meticulon — which currently exists as a sub-project of Autism Calgary but has a goal of becoming a financially self-sustaining company — De Cleen said he was impressed by how the local startup is already marketing itself.

“To be honest, we got a little bit inspired by strong statements like, ‘Our engineers are simply the best at what they do,’” he said. “So that’s maybe a lesson we can take home with us.”

Passwerk started its business and social enterprise in 2008 and within 10 months began turning a profit, De Cleen said, finding a large demand in the fields of software testing and data handling for the kind of hyper-focus and attention to detail that many people with autism can bring to a task.

They since have shared their model with people around the world, including Meticulon CEO Garth Johnson.

“Passwerk gave us everything we needed to start,” Johnson said. “They basically handed us everything on a disk.”

Rombaut said their business, which aims to both improve the lives of people with autism and meet the needs of clients, is not one of proprietary information.

“We really believe in an open source network,” he said.

Expansion in sight

CEO Garth Johnson said Meticulon, which has only been in operation for about a year, will have nine consultants employed by the end of 2014 with local companies.

- Another six people are coming through Meticulon’s rigorous assessment process and should be placed in jobs after that, Johnson said.
- Data entry, data analysis and software testing are the main fields in which Meticulon consultants find work, often with oil and gas companies and banks.

Victim of bullying fights back in Nova Scotia

Generation Change. Annual candlelight vigil remembers Halifax teen Rehtaeh Parsons, who killed herself in April 2013

Toni Nicholas was barely a teenager when she tried to kill herself by swallowing 80 Tylenol pills, the victim of endless bullying at school.

On Saturday, the tiny 16-year-old hosted the third annual Generation Change candlelight vigil to recognize victims of abuse and bullying. Even though she is now an anti-bullying advocate who has founded her own organization, Nicholas acknowledged she still has her dark moments.

Held in Dartmouth, N.S., the vigil was highlighted by a performance by Rebecca Crewe, who sang a song about Rehtaeh Parsons, the Halifax teenager who took her own life in April 2013. Boards off to the side listed the names of dozens of teenagers worldwide who have killed themselves as a result of bullying, a sober reminder of how much work is left to be done.

While it is now too late to help Parsons and the many others who have killed themselves as a result of bullying, Nicholas is seeking to help those who have gone through the same things she has.

CBC tight-lipped on firing Jian Ghomeshi; host says network found his sex life 'unbecoming'

$50 million. The radio personality is suing CBC for breach of confidence and bad faith, and pursuing reinstatement

Radio presenter Jian Ghomeshi arrives at CBC's Toronto studios in this January 2010 file photo. CHRIS YOUNG/THE CANADIAN PRESS

Cultural affairs

It wasn't immediately clear Sunday what would happen to Q, a daily national talk show on CBC Radio One and CBC-TV that Ghomeshi co-created and that featured interviews with celebrities and prominent international figures.

- Ghomeshi's last day in the host's chair was Thursday.
- The cultural affairs program, which launched in 2007, is broadcast on more than 180 NPR/PRI stations and syndicated in the U.S.
- Ghomeshi had been scheduled to host the Scotiabank Giller Prize gala on CBC-TV on Nov. 10 in Toronto. But Elana Rabinovitch, a spokeswoman for the book prize, said in an email Sunday he will no longer preside over the gala.

Q radio host Jian Ghomeshi says he has been fired from the CBC because they believed his "sexual behaviour was unbecoming of a prominent host" on the public broadcaster.

Ghomeshi made the claim in a startling Facebook post Sunday that surfaced just hours after CBC issued a statement saying they were severing ties with the popular personality because of "information" they'd received about him. After that announcement, a Toronto law firm representing Ghomeshi issued a brief statement saying it would launch a lawsuit against the CBC.

"I've been fired from the CBC because of the risk of my private sex life being made public as a result of a campaign of false allegations pursued by a jilted ex girlfriend and a freelance writer," Ghomeshi said in the post, which a publicist confirmed had indeed been written by the radio host.

CBC says the decision to cut ties with Ghomeshi was "not made without serious deliberation" and that it would contest a lawsuit if served with legal documents. It declined to comment on the Facebook post, citing the pending suit.

In the post, Ghomeshi said he has "always been interested in a variety of activities in the bedroom" but only engages in "sexual practices that are mutually agreed upon, consensual, and exciting for both partners."

He said he began to date a woman in her late 20s two years ago and that they had an "affectionate, casual and passionate" relationship that involved "adventurous forms of sex." He went on to say he ended their relationship earlier this year, which upset the woman, and that early in the spring there was "a campaign of harassment, vengeance and demonization" that resulted in "months of anxiety."

He went on to say in the post: "It came to light that a woman had begun anonymously reaching out to people that I had dated (via Facebook) to tell them she had been a victim of abusive relations with me. In other words, someone was reframing what had been an ongoing consensual relationship as something nefarious. I learned — through one of my friends who got in contact with this person — that someone had rifled through my phone on one occasion and taken down the names of any woman I had seemed to have been dating in recent years. This person had begun methodically contacting them to try to build a story against me."

In addition, he asserted in the post: "Someone also began colluding with a freelance writer who was known not to be a fan of mine and, together, they set out to try to find corroborators to build a case to defame me."

Quoted

"It came to light that a woman had begun anonymously reaching out to people that I had dated (via Facebook) to tell them she had been a victim of abusive relations with me. In other words, someone was reframing what had been an ongoing consensual relationship as something nefarious."

Jian Ghomeshi, in a Facebook post Sunday

Ghomeshi said he has been open with CBC about the matter and that he has "never believed it was anyone's business" what he does in his private affairs but that he wanted his bosses to be aware of the situation.

"CBC has been part of the team of friends and lawyers assembled to deal with this for months," he wrote. "On Thursday I voluntarily showed evidence that everything I have done has been consensual. I did this in good faith and because I know, as I have always known, that I have nothing to hide. This when the CBC decided to fire me."

"CBC execs confirmed that the information provided showed that there was consent. In fact, they later said to me and my team that there is no question in their minds that there has always been consent. They said they're not concerned about the legal side. But then they said that this type of sexual behaviour was unbecoming of a prominent host on the CBC. They said that I was being dismissed for 'the risk of the perception that may come from a story that could come out.' To recap, I am being fired in my prime from the show I love and built and threw myself into for years because of what I do in my private life."

Toronto law firm Dentons Canada LLP says the action will claim general and punitive damages for breach of confidence and bad faith in the amount of $50 million. The law firm said documents would be filed on Monday in court but did not elaborate.

The statement also said Ghomeshi will commence a grievance for reinstatement with the CBC under his collective agreement.

On Friday, Ghomeshi, 47, tweeted that he was taking some "much needed personal time" away from the broadcaster. That came after an emotional posting on his Facebook page earlier this month about the recent death of his father.

It wasn't immediately clear what would happen to Q, a daily national talk show on CBC Radio One and CBC-TV which Ghomeshi co-created. Thompson said "it's not uncommon for CBC to use guest hosts on Q and that's what we'll be doing for the foreseeable future."

The departure leaves a gaping hole in the broadcaster's lineup. Ghomeshi was not only a force on radio but did TV appearances as well, and offered a dose of urbane cool to the often stodgy CBC.

Ghomeshi has enjoyed a meteoric rise and publications like the New York Times and Toronto Life magazine have done lengthy profiles on him.

His most well-known interview was his 2009 encounter with Billy Bob Thornton, which became a YouTube sensation. The actor wanted to talk about his musical endeavours and became gruff after the host asked him about his film career. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Zehaf Bibeau recorded video before Ottawa attack: RCMP

'Detailed analysis.' Investigation reveals gunman motivated by 'ideological and political' ideas, Mounties say in statement

JOE LOFARO
Metro in Ottawa

The RCMP said Sunday they have obtained a video of shooter Michael Zehaf Bibeau and the preliminary investigation has revealed his motivations were "ideological and political."

RCMP Commissioner Bob Paulson said in a statement that the video was recorded just before the attack that left Cpl. Nathan Cirillo dead from two gunshot wounds.

Paulson did not say how the RCMP obtained the video or what is depicted in it.

"The RCMP is conducting a detailed analysis of the video for evidence and intelligence. You must understand that we cannot release this video at this time and I would ask for your patience in this regard," the statement read.

While the RCMP says it does not know the origin of the rifle Zehaf Bibeau used in the attack, it says he earned "a considerable amount of funds" by working in the Alberta oilfields.

They said the gun was "old and uncommon" and could have been previously hidden on his aunt's property in Mont Tremblant, Que.

The statement from the RCMP labelled the shooting incident as a "terrorist attack," which is in line with Prime Minister Stephen Harper's characterization of Wednesday's events, but runs counter to statements made by Zehaf Bibeau's mother to Postmedia suggesting he may have suffered from a mental illness.

Paulson said investigators are also looking at Zehaf Bibeau's interactions with "numerous individuals in the days leading up to this attack," and whether those interactions contributed or facilitated it.

"This nationally scoped investigation remains exceptionally active and fluid," wrote Paulson in the statement. "The RCMP undertakes to get as much information to the public as quickly as we can."

Paulson's statement also said police believe Zehaf Bibeau stored a knife at his aunt's property, which they said he brought with him in his attack.

Moncton shooter faces 75-year prison sentence

When Justin Bourque appears in court Monday, he faces the harshest sentence since the death penalty was abolished for fatally shooting three Mounties and wounding two others in Moncton in early June.

However, legal scholars say it's unlikely the 24-year-old will face the maximum penalty — 75 years in prison before he is eligible to apply for parole — given his age and lack of a criminal record.

In early August, Bourque pleaded guilty to three charges of first-degree murder and two counts of attempted murder.

A single conviction for first-degree murder carries a mandatory life sentence and a ban on applying for parole for 25 years. However, Judge David Smith of the Court of Queen's Bench has said the Crown wants him to use a 2011 amendment to the Criminal Code that allows judges to extend parole ineligibility in the case of multiple murders.

In this case, Smith could decide that the 25-year ineligibility period for each murder conviction should be imposed consecutively, which means Bourque wouldn't be allowed to apply for parole until he was 99 years old.

A tribute grows in front of the RCMP station in Moncton, N.B., on June 7 following the shooting deaths of three Mounties. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

The Harper government changed the law to eliminate what it called the "volume discount" for multiple murderers.

The law has been used only once since it was changed. In September 2013, a judge in Edmonton sentenced an armoured-car guard to life in prison with no chance at parole for 40 years for gunning down four of his colleagues during a robbery in June 2012.

Travis Baumgartner had pleaded guilty to one count of first-degree murder, two counts of second-degree murder and a charge of attempted murder.

It was the toughest criminal penalty since Canada's last executions in 1962.

Baumgartner was facing a 75-year parole ineligibility period, but the judge cited mitigating factors, including his age, lack of a criminal record and his guilty pleas, which prevented a prolonged trial.

It's for these same reasons that law professor Isabel Grant believes Bourque will be given a lighter sentence.

"I would be surprised if the court imposed 75 years on someone his age," said Grant, who teaches at the University of British Columbia. "To make the jump to 75 years would be quite dramatic."

Quarantined nurse is critical of N.Y., N.J. state Ebola policies

'This is not a situation I would wish on anyone.' U.S. health-care worker says she worries for those who will be held after her

A nurse who was quarantined at a New Jersey hospital — because she had contact with Ebola patients in West Africa — has criticized the way her case has been handled, raising concerns from humanitarian and human rights groups over unclear policies for the newly launched quarantine program.

Kaci Hickox, the first traveller quarantined under Ebola watches in New Jersey and New York, wrote a first-person account for the Dallas Morning News online Saturday. Her tests for Ebola came back negative.

From left, New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio, wife Chirlane McCray, and New York City Health Commissioner Dr. Mary Bassett have a meal at The Meatball Shop in New York on Saturday, where Dr. Craig Spencer, an Ebola patient, ate just before he became ill. CRAIG RUTTLE/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

"This is not a situation I would wish on anyone, and I am scared for those who will follow me," Hickox wrote of her quarantine. "I am scared about how health-care workers will be treated at airports when they declare that they have been fighting Ebola in West Africa. I am scared that, like me, they will arrive and see a frenzy of disorganization, fear and, most frightening, quarantine.... The U.S. must treat returning health-care workers with dignity and humanity."

New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo and New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie on Friday imposed a mandatory quarantine of 21 days — the incubation period of the deadly virus — on travellers who have had contact with Ebola patients in the countries ravaged by Ebola — Liberia, Guinea and Sierra Leone. Similar measures were announced in Illinois and Florida.

The details of how quarantines will be handled are drawing sharp criticism as infectious disease experts say enforcement logistics are up in the air.

The quarantine measures were announced after a New York physician, Craig Spencer, who worked for Doctors Without Borders, returned from Guinea and was admitted to Manhattan's Bellevue Hospital Center to be treated for Ebola.

Dr. Irwin Redlener, a Columbia University professor and director of the New York-based National Center for Disaster Preparedness, said the logistics of the states' new quarantine policy are "a problem."

"The challenge now is how you translate this quarantine plan to operational protocol," Redlener said.

Identifying risk levels

Florida Gov. Rick Scott is ordering twice-daily monitoring for anyone returning from places the federal CDC designates as affected by Ebola.

- Authority to monitor. Scott said his administration asked the CDC to identify the risk levels of individuals returning from West Africa.
- Vigilance. Scott said he was taking action out of an abundance of caution following news that a New York doctor tested positive for Ebola.

Cashing in. Drugmakers bet there's money to be made from Ebola outbreak Drugmakers are racing to develop vaccines and drugs to address the worst outbreak of Ebola in history. It's unclear who will pay for their products, but companies are betting that governments and aid groups will foot the bill.

There are no proven drugs or vaccines for Ebola, in large part because the disease is so rare that up until now it's been hard to attract research funding. And the West African nations hardest hit by the outbreak are unlikely to be able to afford new Ebola vaccines and drugs.

But governments and corporations now are shifting millions of dollars to fight Ebola in the wake of the outbreak that has infected nearly 10,000 people and killed more than 4,800. Experts say drugmakers are wagering that international groups and wealthier governments like the U.S. will buy Ebola vaccines and drugs in mass quantities to stockpile them for future use once they're deemed safe. Israeli farmers observe year-long sabbatical ... sort of Every seven years, according to the Bible, Israeli farmers must give their lands a rest for a year.

So how do modern-day growers reconcile the ancient spiritual practice with a need to feed the country's eight million mouths?

Most market their produce thanks to a clever workaround: They temporarily sold their farms, valued together at $33 billion US, to a 25-year-old non-Jewish telemarketer named George.

"I own all those lands, and I don't even own an apartment," joked George Shtraykhman, an immigrant from St. Petersburg, Russia.

The seventh-year sabbatical, called "shmita" in Hebrew, began last month on the Jewish New Year, and extends through the fall of 2015. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Trick or treat on the business beat

HOW TO ROLL
Alison Griffiths
investing@metronews.ca

October is often full of tricks and treats for the investor and also the business world. This year has been no exception. Here's what was ghoulish and glorious.

Thumbs up:

The stock market. First there was the stomach-dropping slide of more than 10 per cent from September highs during the first half of the month. Then came the 700-point bounce back during the last two weeks. There was much gnashing of teeth about the dive but it was very positive for the patient long-term investor. All those solid stocks that just kept getting more expensive, especially in the oil patch, were suddenly on sale.

The smart money moved in quickly and, voilà, a rebound was born. If you missed it, put together a shopping list of stocks and waste no time buying during the next dip.

Thumbs down:

CEO foot-in-mouth disease strikes again. Don't these fellows (and they are usually guys) have handlers? Here's how the latest gaffes happened. Microsoft CEO Satya Nadella got together with his Apple and Facebook chums, Tim Cook and Mark Zuckerberg, for a little coffee klatch.

They ruminated about how they could best present a solid paternalistic, anti-female front in the decidedly girl-unfriendly world of technology. That should be good for business, right?

Nadella's big idea was to encourage women not to ask for a raise but wait until Daddy offered. Somehow, this lady-like reticence would translate into good corporate karma. Cook and Zuckerberg thought they could go one better. They decided to provide egg freezing as a health benefit to female employees. That way, the companies could avoid those pesky maternity benefits and when the gals weren't wanted anymore, say around age 40, off they'd go to thaw their eggs and get pregnant on their own time.

Now that's what I call advanced thinking.

Thumbs down:

Two days from now the "low-cost" airline, which provides no-charge jokes with your flight, will ding you $25 for a first checked bag on economy flights. WestJet was first out of the gate with this abomination, but no surprise, Air Canada quickly followed with baggage charges to begin on Nov. 2.

Halloween scares up big profits

Halloween holds no fear for retailers.

In fact, rather than spooking the economy, all those little (and sometimes not so little) ghosts and goblins scare up monthly spending that is second only to December and the Christmas season.

And with the day falling on a Friday this year, interest will likely peak as both children and adults go looking for costumes and decorations as well.

Statistics Canada said Canadians doled out $381 million on candy, confectionery and snack foods last October, leaving the month second only to the nearly $451 million spent in December. THE CANADIAN PRESS

SETTING THE STORY IN NYC WON'T MAKE IT BETTER

URBAN COMPASS
Jeremy Klaszus
calgary@metronews.ca

We live in a land of interesting stories.

It's taken Albertans awhile to clue into this. In Edmonton, novelist Thomas Wharton recently complained on his blog about the number of his writing students who refuse to set stories in their own city because they hate it.

"It seems to be the attitude of most beginning writers here that only New York, London, or Big Gritty Generic City USA are proper settings for a story," wrote Wharton, who teaches at the University of Alberta. "These students have absorbed the idea — wherever from? — that this place is too dull, boring, and characterless to be worth setting a story in."

But if you don't tell the story of your own home, Wharton argued, somebody from somewhere else will take it from you, and sell it back.

He's right. Even worse: In recent years, our federal and provincial governments have dumped millions of dollars on PR campaigns that aim to "share our energy story" with the rest of the world.

A few years ago, a journalism colleague asked me when we'd see a novel about Alberta and the oilsands. What he meant was, when would somebody take on what's happening right here, right now? Twentysomethings raking in six-figure salaries in Fort McMurray. Newly homeless families amid Calgary's boomtown affluence. Tightening tension between industry and indigenous communities along the Athabasca River.

All the elements of a good story were there. Heck, look at all the film celebrities — stars in the business of storytelling — who have flown to Fort McMurray to see it for themselves.

It was all right in front of us.

So why, my colleague wondered, had no Alberta novelist tackled this?

It seems this is changing. We now have that oilsands book, for one thing. Giller-nominated author Fred Stenson, one of western Canada's best and most accomplished storytellers, recently published Who by Fire, a novel set in contemporary Alberta.

Stenson, who lives in Cochrane, begins in southern Alberta in the 1960s, where farmer families suffer after the arrival of a new sour gas processing plant. Stenson then brings us to modern Alberta, exploring the tension between industrial development and neighbouring communities. I'm only partway through the book, but I'm glad Stenson chose to write about his own home, his story. Our story.

I'm sure a few Alberta novelists are looking at Stenson and wondering: Why didn't I think of that? With storytelling confidence comes maturity. When the New York Times published a story last week on Calgary's flourishing cultural scene, for example, the local response on social media was measured satisfaction rather than gobsmacked ecstasy. It wasn't, "I can't believe it! We got written up in the New York Times!" It was more, "Hey cool, the New York Times is noticing what an interesting city this is."

This is a place with interesting stories. We shouldn't hesitate to keep telling them.

RE: Coverage of the Parliament Hill shooting

Don't call it chaos I need to object to the coverage I read of the Ottawa shooting in Metro, particularly the headline for Trevor Greenway's article "Ottawa thrown into chaos." I didn't see chaos at all in the footage yesterday. I saw policemen doing their jobs bravely and promptly, people from Parliament being whisked away efficiently out of harm's way, and a gunman being stopped. Don't hype things up. Kristen McKendry, Mississauga ON

Thanks for staying away from the terrorism label I congratulate your reporters for their excellent reporting of the news related to subject. Your staff avoided tagging Zehaf Bibeau a terrorist and the incident an act of terrorism. I suggested to a senior writer of one daily that it was an oversimplification to identify Zehaf Bibeau as a terrorist. His response in part was: "I think most people would consider someone who shoots and kills a soldier then storms the Parliament Buildings, apparently hoping to kill politicians, to have engaged in an act of terrorism." I pointed out to the senior writer that his response stating that Zehaf Bibeau was "hoping to kill politicians" was speculative. Was Zehaf Bibeau marginalized or radicalized? That is the question that should be addressed. He committed a heinous, despicable crime; however, the answer to the question should be a determinant as the government considers a response.
Alistair Hensler, Ottawa

The politics of semantics

I pointed out that in 1989 Marc Lépine shot and killed 14 women in Montreal and that act was not considered terrorism.

Muslims against crazy In recent years, I stumbled across Islam and was surprised to find that it was an incredibly peaceful, beautiful, humble way of life. I became Muslim. And now I sit with other Muslims, a sense of foreboding in the air, dreading the news reports. We know we're good people-we know we're better for our belief. But does the rest of the world know? How can they, when they listen to the news: "Islamic militants," "jihad terrorists." It isn't possible to explain the reasons for the horrors committed around the world, supposedly in the name of Islam. It is, however, possible for me to say how deeply it sickens me. Violence will never solve the world's problems. So let's work towards a new goal. Let's come together, work together, use our minds rather than our fists and draw strength from the collective love in our hearts, rather than being driven by reprisal. Bridget Mc., Halifax

The spirits moved Ouija to No. 1 at the box office, with the board-game adaption leading the weekend with a $20 million US debut, according to studio estimates Sunday.

The horror movie release attracted more moviegoers at the box office than the violent Keanu Reeves thriller John Wick. The R-rated hit-man tale opened with $14.2 million in second place.

Weezer worries about becoming rock geezers

Music. Band tells itself Everything Will Be Alright In the End in new album contemplating a fading career

LISA WEIDENFELD
Metro in Boston

Weezer frontman Rivers Cuomo, second from right, says the band's new album "ultimately feels triumphant." EMILY SCHUR

For a band famous for songs about youthful alienation, with titles like The World Has Turned and Left Me Here, naming an album Everything Will Be Alright in the End represents a pretty big step.

But Weezer frontman Rivers Cuomo says that change has been hard-won.

"We went through so many life stages, creative stages, interests, experiences, ups and downs, and we faced some deeply troubling realities," he says of the years since their last album, 2010's Hurley.

After all of that, Cuomo says the lesson they learned is what led to the band naming their latest album title, Everything Will Be Alright In the End.

"I think really it's just a way to put into one phrase with words the feeling you get from the album where over the course of the 41 minutes," he says. "You go through quite a few different worlds and terrains and ultimately it feels triumphant by the time you get to the final chorus."

The band members are so happy about Everything that they're playing every song from the album at each tour stop, though Cuomo assures us that older songs will be in the mix as well. Asked if playing those older songs still feels as personal to him as more recent efforts, Cuomo replies, "I feel like Weezer at its best is writing from a very deep, timeless and ageless place that I have no problems relating to. Even with our earliest songs, they feel like us."

That's not to say the new album isn't personal as well.

"I'm always inspired by the emotional push and pull in my relationships and my daily life," he says.

We ask him to explain the ominously titled Eulogy For a Rock Band. The opening lines of the song are, "Goodbye heroes, you had a good run, 15 years of ruling the planet, but now your light's fading." He promises it's not a critique about his own band, but was instead inspired by seeing one of his musical heroes.

"A forefather who's perhaps the biggest rock star of all time in one of the later stages of his career," is all that he will allow. Though Cuomo is cagey about who the musician was, he does say the experience made him think about how "each successive generation is less familiar with his work and ultimately that means he and his life's work are headed towards oblivion, and realizing that gosh, if that's the fate of his work, then obviously that goes for the rest of us, too."

But hey, everything will be all right in the end, right? Cuomo says keeping to that credo is what gives him the confidence to keep going as an artist.

"Even if we're not 100 per cent certain, that's what we have to tell ourselves," he says.

The band will mostly be playing smaller club shows on the tour, which Cuomo is a big fan of. "Playing giant venues is great because it's just such a spectacle from the stage to see 80,000 people, it's awe-inspiring, but we also love playing for just a few people or a few hundred people, feeling them right next to us, right in front of us. They tend to be the most hard-core fans and will sing every word at the top of their lungs and you know how much your music means to them, and that's what every artist dreams of, and it's the greatest feeling in the world."

The final chorus

"You go through quite a few different worlds and terrains and ultimately it feels triumphant by the time you get to the final chorus."

Weezer frontman Rivers Cuomo describes the band's latest album.

Sussing out the self-involved psyche

Actor interview. Julianne Moore talks about L.A. life and how epic egos aren't exclusive to Hollywood

scene@metronews.ca

Julianne Moore plays actress Havana Segrand in Maps to the Stars, which opens Friday. CONTRIBUTED

In the new David Cronenberg film Maps to the Stars, Julianne Moore plays actress Havana Segrand.

A child of Hollywood, she's the daughter of a movie star who became a star herself but is now "monstrous and childlike," Moore says.

Havana is a bundle of exposed ego and neurosis, a Hollywood stereotype, but Moore promises she's not based on anyone in particular.

"I swear to you she sprung to life from the page," she says. "That was what was great about it. (Screenwriter) Bruce Wagner's language is so precise, so spectacular, so emotional; it was almost like poetry.

"There was a rhythm to it. I could hear her voice in the rhythm of the speech and how things were supposed to be delivered.

"The key to Havana for me was her arrested development. She's stuck at the age her mother died. She's so childlike.

"Everything is all about her mother and not being parented. All this childish, even sexpot behaviour — the 'Look at me!' — is all about not being parented. That's all she wants."

The film is a wonderfully sadistic portrait of Tinsel Town and its citizens, portraying the wild side of Los Angeles, where venal and stratospherically self-involved behaviour plays itself out on the public stage. It's a dark picture of life in Hollywood, but Moore, a longtime resident of New York City, says the conduct isn't exclusive to the movie biz.

"I'm sure there can be a certain kind of permissiveness in any business," she says, "on Wall Street and Silicon Valley and in certain socialite circles.

"People try and pin it on Hollywood as the only place it happens, and of course, it's not.

"I only lived in L.A. for a while in the '90s. There was a different quality to socializing than I had ever seen before. I'm pretty bourgeois. I'm not a partier. I don't really go out. But when I moved to L.A., there was a degree of socialization. I was like, 'Whoa, there's a lot of parties out here.'

"I was also single and out in a way I hadn't been before. Very soon after that, I met my husband, we had children and I went right back into my hole."

She does, however, go out from time to time.

"I have a school event later tonight," she laughs as we end the interview.

Hilton's million-dollar DJ gig has Deadmau5 squeaking

You might've gotten upset about the idea of Paris Hilton getting paid more than $1 million for a DJ set, but you've got nothing on actual DJ Deadmau5. He got so worked up, he had to write a scathing Tumblr post about the whole thing. "Personally, I would pay about as much to see her 'perform' as Indy fans would pay to watch me struggle to get out of first gear and 20 feet off the starting grid in an Indy500 race without ending up in a wreck," he writes. "Get the f-- back in your go-kart. No need to prove that you found someone stupid enough to consider paying you a million dollars for something the world knows you aren't. Because here's what you actually are to everyone who knows better: ticket sales. Nothing more."

Brad Pitt's 'career maintenance' tip was a Trojan horse

NED EHRBAR
Metro in Hollywood

OK, here's a fun game.

In the latest issue of Details magazine, Brad Pitt is featured in a fancy photo series shot by Mark Seliger, and instead of a full accompanying interview, the magazine dapples the images with some "interesting" quotes by Pitt.

One of them is pretty interesting, actually:

"I was once talked into a film for 'career maintenance.'

"I have not made that mistake since," Pitt says. Which begs the question, which film is he talking about?

While Pitt has generally been pretty good at picking projects, he's gotten really careful since shacking up with Angelina Jolie. But that also coincides nicely with his production company, Plan B, getting more clout. So I'm putting my money on 2004's laughable Troy, an uncharacteristically Big Hollywood choice for Pitt — and one that he looks palpably uncomfortable in.

There's also a slight possibility he's talking about The Mexican, but that film's kind of adorable in its own scruffy way, and Pitt seemed to be having such a good time doing it that I doubt it. I'm still going with the terrible, terrible swords-and-sandals epic misfire.

Taylor Swift

If Taylor can make it there, she'll make it anywhere

It's Taylor Swift Album Release Day, y'all! Oh wait, maybe forget the y'all, as she's not really a country artist anymore.

Anyway, today marks the release of Swift's latest album, 1989, and it kicks off with a track you might've heard already — since Swift released it last week in advance of the album — called Welcome to New York. So, you know, welcome! So why is she being so "willkommen, bienvenue, welcome!" to everyone for a city she's only been living in for a tiny bit? Because she's trying to speak her truth, obviously.

"I never thought I'd live in New York, because I thought I'd be too overwhelmed by how busy and bright and crazy the city is," Swift tells Esquire. "Then all of a sudden, this year, all I wanted to do was live in New York. I never thought I would be so happy being completely unattached to anyone romantically."

And from that, she was inspired to write a song that will be the theme for NYU and Columbia freshman orientation weekends for at least the next three years. Listen, I'm glad Swift's new home is so inspiring, but I'd imagine any city would be great to live in when you can snatch up a $19.9 million apartment.

Leasing a car can make sense depending on your situation

Lease or finance? If you're leasing just to free up cash for stupid stuff, then you're doing it wrong

GAIL VAZ-OXLADE
Gail blogs daily at gailvazoxlade.com

A friend of mine was telling me he's in the market for a new car.

"Paying cash, financing or leasing?" I asked, not realizing I was about to step into a pile of poop.

"Lease?!" he shouted, the spittle flying. "And you call yourself a financial whiz."

Actually, I don't. Other people may, but I just consider myself a chick who is sensible with her money. Anyhoo, I said, "So, what do you have against leasing?"

"Well, that's like dumping a whole bunch of money into a vehicle that you'll never own. It's stupid. Like renting."

Whoa now, buddy, renting isn't stupid, and neither is leasing, for the right person and the right reasons. (He might be considered stupid for buying a new car and taking the depreciation hit when he drives it off the lot, but I digress.) Let's look at some facts about leasing, then, shall we?

Fact 1: When you lease, you only pay for the vehicle's depreciation over the term of your lease. To figure this out, take the residual value (the estimated value of the vehicle at the end of the lease term) and subtract it from the total purchase price. This is the amount on which your payments are based, plus the lease (interest) rate you're paying and applicable taxes.

Fact 2: At the end of your lease, you have the option of either buying the vehicle for the predetermined residual value, or returning it to the dealer. If you return the vehicle, it was like renting the car. If you buy it out, it's more like another form of financing.

Fact 3: A lease will mean substantially lower monthly payments because you are not making any payments on said residual value. That can free up cash flow for other things, like paying down debt that's costing you more in interest. But you will have to come up with the residual value if you want to buy the vehicle at the end of the lease. (Yes, you can refinance the buyout, but that's gonna cost you interest, too.)

Fact 4: You will pay more to lease if you assume the same purchase price, interest rates and total number of payments plus the residual value. What a lot of people don't get is that while you're leasing, you pay interest on the full value of the vehicle, including the residual value. When you use financing, the amount on which interest is being calculated is reduced at a faster rate so you end up paying less.

Fact 5: Leasing can work out to be cheaper. If the interest rate on the lease is lower (or if the financing term is longer), the lease will be less expensive.

With the current trend of up to 84-month financing, the interest costs on loans can outstrip leasing costs. Shop smart. If lease rates are better than financing rates because manufacturers are subsidizing their leases, you'll win on the lease.

Fact 6: Dealers have been known to jack up the price on a vehicle depending on how you plan to finance the purchase. Don't go in declaring how you're going to pay.

As far as the dealer is concerned, you don't have a trade-in, you don't need financing, and you don't plan to lease. You're just pricing out the car.

Who benefits from leasing

If you are self-employed or have a company through which you are running your vehicle(s), leasing may offer a bigger tax payoff than financing.

Or, if you're determined to buy out the vehicle but need some breathing room in your cash flow, leasing can work to your advantage. You'll not only make your monthly lease payments on time, you'll also be socking away the money you need to make the buyout.

If you're prepared to spend a little money to get the best deal ($40), go to carcostcanada.com for the wholesale price on the car you're considering.

Fact 7: It's your job to read and understand your lease, including knowing your mileage and wear limits, overage charges, termination charges, and buyout fees. If you know you drive a lot and the kilometre allowance will be used up in no time flat, reconcile yourself to buying out the vehicle and start saving to do it.

But if you're leasing just to have extra money to spend on stupid stuff, then you're using the strategy the wrong way. Stick with the discipline financing offers. And make sure you stay under 48 months for your loan.

This recipe serves six. ROSE REISMAN

Mediterranean Turkey Meatloaf Stuffed with Spinach and Feta. A new spin on an old fave

This meatloaf made with ground turkey is so versatile that you can serve it for a Monday night dinner or an elegant dinner party.

Ground turkey or chicken is a healthier alternative to beef. Four ounces of beef has 300 calories and 20 grams of fat, compared to lean turkey, which contains only 130 calories and seven grams of fat per four-ounce serving.

That's a considerable saving in terms of your calories, fat, cholesterol and heart health. Not to mention your weight!

Turkey is loaded with B vitamins and selenium, an antioxidant necessary for thyroid metabolism. It is, however, most known for tryptophan, an amino acid that triggers serotonin production, which calms you and helps you sleep.

I keep the lean turkey moist in this meatloaf by adding tomato sauce. You can also add ketchup or barbeque sauce.

The Mediterranean filling is what really takes this meatloaf to a more elegant level.

When sliced, the filling is attractive to look at and adds the distinct taste to the milder turkey flavour.

Directions

1. Preheat your oven to 425 F. Spray an 8-inch by 4-inch loaf pan with vegetable oil.

2. Filling: In a small skillet sprayed with vegetable oil, sauté the finely diced onions in oil and garlic for 3 minutes or just until tender. Add the spinach and feta cheese.

3. Meatloaf: Combine all of the ingredients until they are well mixed.

4. Pat half the meat into a pan, place spinach topping over top, add remaining meat over top and pat down. Pour tomato sauce over top. Bake for 25 minutes or until internal temperature reaches 165 F.

5. Garnish with cheese.

Young trio turns dining out into helping out with their Mealshare program

Jeremy Bryant, Andrew Hall and Derek Juno are the founders of Mealshare, a program which sees a meal donated to someone in need each time a diner orders an item with the Mealshare logo next to it at a partner restaurant.
BREANNE SICH/MEALSHARE

The next time you dine out, you could also do a good deed by providing a meal for someone else.

With Mealshare, every time a patron picks an item branded with the organization's logo from the menu of a participating restaurant, money is donated to charity.

Three young men from western Canada are the brains behind Mealshare, which launched in July 2013 with four partner restaurants. The organization has expanded to 84 partner restaurants in seven cities across the country. Nearly 114,000 meals have been served.

"Mealshare really is very, very simple at its core, and really what it is is a buy one, give one concept and I really do think that's why it's been having so much success ... because customers can completely understand the concept and the promise we give our restaurant partners and their customers which is, 'You see this meal in front of you, you're having this amazing experience and ... I know just because I picked the particular item off the menu that had a specific logo someone else is getting a meal as well.' That tangibility of that one for one is really apparent," said Derek Juno, vice-president of development for Mealshare.

There is no added cost to the customer. The restaurant contributes a small amount (about $1) for every Mealshare item ordered to the organization. Customers receive a thank-you card embedded with seeds that can be planted in a garden or windowsill pot.

Co-founders Andrew Hall and Jeremy Bryant were working at multinational consulting and accounting firms and wanted to do more to give back to those less fortunate. Meanwhile, Juno, who met Hall in business school, travelled for eight months in southeast Asia in 2012, where he spent some time teaching English at an orphanage and school in Cambodia. He too had been casting about for a way to provide financial sustainability for the organization he'd been working for.

As their idea was percolating, "we soon found out that eight million people dine out every single day in Canada and if we could get a small portion of those people eating Mealshare meals we could do amazing things," said Juno, who worked on the initiative full-time upon his return to Vancouver from travelling. Fellow Vancouverite Hall and Edmonton-based Bryant quit their well-paying jobs to pursue Mealshare.

Juno acknowledged that for quite some time the initiative was a labour of love for the three 25-year-olds.

"We were doing it on a volunteer basis for about seven months and then we started taking a small honorarium just to keep the lights on and we've been really, really lucky that we've had so much support over the last 15 months that we've been able to grow really, really quickly."

Growing for good

- Save the Children provides meals to children in schools in Africa on Mealshare's behalf. Juno said they have made a three-year commitment to the charity.
- Last month, Mealshare launched at three Halifax establishments. There are plans to start up next month in Lethbridge, Alta., as well as with a chain in western Canada with 62 locations.

Cardinals rookie dies in car crash

St. Louis Cardinals outfielder Oscar Taveras died Sunday in a car accident in his native Dominican Republic.

The 22-year-old Taveras made his major-league debut this year. The promising slugger hit .239 with three homers and 22 RBIs in 80 games.

Taveras signed with St. Louis as an international free agent in 2008. Before this season, Taveras was ranked as the No. 3 overall prospect by MLB.com and Baseball America, and had a. 321 average over six minor-league seasons.

Goalie leads Hawks to victory in NHL debut

Jonathan Toews and Brent Seabrook scored, Scott Darling made 32 saves in his NHL debut, and the Chicago Blackhawks snapped a two-game losing streak with a 2-1 victory over the Ottawa Senators on Sunday night.

Patrick Kane assisted on Toews' goal for his 500th NHL point.

Milan Michalek scored a short-handed goal for the Senators, who have dropped two straight.

The game featured a matchup of goalies from the Chicago area.

Darling, a native of Lemont, Ill., was steady as he faced a handful of tough chances. Ottawa's Craig Anderson, from Park Ridge, Ill., stopped 43 shots, including a second-period penalty shot by Andrew Shaw. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Madison Bumgarner smothered the Kansas City Royals for the second time in a week, pitching a four-hitter that led the San Francisco Giants to a 5-0 victory Sunday night and a 3-2 World Series lead.

Bumgarner struck out eight and walked none in improving to 4-0 in four World Series starts. He has allowed one run in 31 Series innings, an astonishing 0.29 ERA.

Brandon Crawford drove in three runs and Juan Perez hit a two-run double for the Giants, seeking to become only the second NL team to win three titles in a five-year span.

James Shields lost to Bumgarner for the second time, allowing eight hits and two runs in six innings.

In the 41 previous instances the World Series was 2-2 in the best-of-seven format, the Game 5 winner has taken the title 27 times. After a day off, the Series resumes Tuesday night at Kansas City's Kauffman Stadium. In a rematch of Game 2 starters, Yordano Ventura pitches for the Royals and Jake Peavy for the Giants.

This is not a drill: Jets lose to Bills

Robert Woods of the Buffalo Bills celebrates scoring a first-quarter touchdown with teammate Mike Williams against the New York Jets at MetLife Stadium in East Rutherford, N.J. The Bills fully capitalized on the Jets' six turnovers on their way to a dominant 43-23 win. Scan the image with your Metro News app for more NFL Sunday coverage.

NFL. New York torched by its own turnovers at home in seventh straight loss

Ten completions, four touchdowns.

Kyle Orton didn't have to do much for the Buffalo Bills, not when the New York Jets had six turnovers — three each by Geno Smith and Michael Vick — in a 43-23 rout Sunday.

"He went out there, made his throws and threw for four touchdowns," Bills coach Doug Marrone said of Orton.

"He knew exactly what he wanted to do. When you have a veteran quarterback like that, he's going to make the right plays."

Orton tied a career high with his four TD passes, and won for the third time in four games since replacing EJ Manuel as the starting quarterback for the Bills (5-3).

Orton finished 10 of 17 for 238 yards, connecting with Robert Woods, Lee Smith, Scott Chandler and Sammy Watkins for scores.

Watkins had three catches for 157 yards — but was embarrassed when he was caught from behind while celebrating early on what appeared would be a long TD. Without the injured Fred Jackson and C.J. Spiller in the backfield, the Bills rushed for just 67 yards.

But Stephon Gilmore, Preston Brown, Aaron Williams and Da'Norris Searcy had interceptions for the Bills, who sent the struggling Jets (1-7) to their seventh straight loss.

"No doubt, our defence is incredible and one of the best in the league," Orton said. "Any time your defence gets six turnovers, it makes your job easier."

The Jets have lost seven in a row for the first time since 2005, in Herm Edwards' final season as coach. Smith threw interceptions on three consecutive possessions in the first quarter and was pulled in favour of Vick, who was picked off once and lost two fumbles.

"Let me tell you," coach Rex Ryan said, "I'm getting sick and tired of the losing, that's for sure."

New York announced after the game that Smith had X-rays on his right shoulder after the game, but did not immediately announce results. The injury was not believed to have affected Smith's performance.

Ryan didn't immediately announce whether Smith or Vick would start next week at Kansas City.

Percy Harvin, acquired last weekend by the Jets from Seattle, caught three passes for 22 yards and had 28 yards rushing on four carries in his debut with New York.

Pospisil claims third doubles title of the year

Canada's Vasek Pospisil and Serbia's Nenad Zimonjic won the doubles title on Sunday at the Swiss Indoors.

First-time combination Pospisil and Zimonjic defeated Finn Henri Kontinen and Marin Draganja of Croatia 7-6 (13), 1-6, 10-5 for the trophy.

Pospisil, from Vancouver, added the indoor crown to two more titles this season with American Jack Sock. That pair will resume its partnership next week in Paris in a bid for a qualifying place in the World Tour Finals in London next month.

Pospisil owns titles in 2014 with Sock from Wimbledon and Atlanta. The pair were beaten in the finals in Cincinnati and Beijing.

"Nenad and I knew we could both play well together, we found out we clicked," Pospisil said. "We play well together and have great energy.

"We both serve well also. This was a great week for us."

Two straight sets. Serena bounces back to win WTA Finals over Simona Halep

The lead-up to Sunday's championship match at the WTA Finals suggested Serena Williams would face a major challenge to beat Simona Halep, but then, the No. 1-ranked player has made a career out of performing at her best when it matters most.

She did it again in Singapore, dispatching Halep 6-3, 6-0 just four days after a group-stage game between the pair in which the Romanian player dropped only two games and handed Williams her heaviest defeat for 16 years.

Coming into the tournament after having to withdraw from the China Open and Wuhan Open with illness and a knee injury, and just a day after a gruelling three-set classic against Caroline Wozniacki, there was plenty of reasons to believe the 33-year-old could be vulnerable.

The doubts, though, were quickly swept aside as Williams overpowered her opponent in an imperious performance.

She won 11 of the last 12 games in the match to join Martina Navratilova and Steffi Graf as the only players to have won five titles in the season-ending championships.
